

Third Partners' Meeting in Prešov: Advancing the Manuals and Preparing for the Testing Phase

The ConnectDiverse consortium convened in Prešov, Slovakia, for its third transnational meeting, hosted by the University of Prešov. This meeting marked a key milestone, focusing on assessing progress and advancing the development of the project's main outputs.

Partners concentrated on finalising the manuals and workshop materials tailored for academic teachers, university authorities, and administrative staff. These resources are central to the project's mission of equipping higher education institutions with practical tools to better support neuroatypical students and promote inclusive academic environments.

A significant part of the discussions addressed the transition from development to implementation. The consortium reviewed preparations for the upcoming testing phase, during which the draft materials will be piloted with target groups to collect feedback, validate their usability, and refine the content into final versions. This step is essential to ensure the relevance and real-world applicability of the project results.

The meeting also facilitated in-depth exchange of knowledge and good practices among partners, reinforcing collaboration and contributing to the quality of outputs related to neurodiversity in higher education. In parallel, partners discussed dissemination and communication strategies, aligning their efforts to effectively share project outcomes with stakeholders across Europe.

Overall, the Prešov meeting served both as a working session and a strategic coordination point, strengthening the consortium's joint approach and ensuring that the next phase of the project is well-structured, collaborative, and impact oriented.
